

LANDSEER

Background

Founded in 2005, Landseer is an investment advisor to US endowments, foundations, and family offices. Landseer also manages discretionary private equity funds.

Client assets are invested across a range of asset classes and geographies, through both allocations to external investment managers and direct investments. Portfolios include investments in public equity, private equity, real estate, natural resources, and various hedge fund strategies.

Landseer has a small, team-oriented work environment. All members of the investment staff are generalists and need to be capable of underwriting both fund investments as well as direct investments. Critical thinking and resourcefulness are encouraged across the organization. Our investment approach is opportunistically-oriented, focused on identifying investment strategies or areas that are particularly attractive due to capital scarcity, complexity, dislocation, or misperception.

Landseer has offices in Princeton, New Jersey and New York City.

Investment Analyst Role

An investment analyst assists in the day-to-day management of our client endowment portfolios. Job responsibilities include but are limited to:

- Assisting in the analysis of investment strategies, sectors, and geographies;
- Working with colleagues to source and evaluate external investment manager relationships;
- Monitoring existing investment manager relationships through ongoing dialogues, portfolio analysis, and other research;
- Assisting senior investment staff with high-level asset allocation research, including asset class valuation;
- Communicating with clients, preparing client reports, and writing due diligence memos.

Qualifications

Bachelor's degree or its equivalent is required. Related experience and prior interest in investing is preferred. Candidates must have strong written and oral communication skills; they must be detail-oriented and have excellent spreadsheet and analytical skills. Critical thinking and intellectual curiosity are essential. Given Landseer's small work environment, an Investment Analyst must be comfortable working autonomously, as well as collaborating with other team members. Compensation will be commensurate with experience.
